[From the Cincianati Commercial.] Jeemes Awe. As sung with great applause in all the tobacco warehouses throughout the Union. In wee small hou's of the night,
When everything is still.
A whisper steals from out of sight
Behind the widdow-sill—
Jim: Jim: oh. Jim!
Jim: Wake no. Jim!
Sweet-Owen-Jeemes! Jim Awe!

When rosy mo'n has flushed the east,

When rosy morn has hished the cost,
Befo' the break of day.
I heab the voice, that sounds at least
Ten thousand miles away—
Jim! Jim! ob. Jim!
Jim! you Jim!
Sweet-Owen-Jeemes! Jim Awe!

At noontime when the summer's sun
Is blazing in the skies.
When ha't the busy day is done
A blaste'ed echo cries—
Jim! Jim! say, Jim!
J-1-1-m! t'm hungry, Jim!
Sweet-Owen-Jeemes, Jim Awe! At evening, when the sun is low, And bats are on the wing. When shadows faint and fainteh grow, The gentle zepbehs sing— Jim! Jim! oh, Jim!

Jim! I want you. Jim! Sweet-Owen-Jeemes, Jim Awe!

At dead of night, when all is da'k.
The moon behind the hill.
When Nightingales out/to the la'k,
Methink I heab 'em still— Jim! Jim! why, Jim! Jim! You comin', Jim! Sweet-Dwen-Jeemes, Jim Awe! I'rom early mo'n till dewey eve,

From early mo'n this awey every
From dusky eve till mo'n
Some one has callet, I do belleve, sluce fust poo' Jim was bo'n—
Jim! Jim! Come, Jim!
Jim! God biess in e. Jim!
Sweet-Owen-Jeemes, Jim Awe!

The Lord's Day in the Land of the Pilgrims.

[From the New York Evening Post.] One Sunday morning during the war of 1812, if we recall the case aright, a postrider cantered into a New England village with the news of the military movement of the British upon Washington, and in haste spurred his horse across the green of the meeting house, thereby disturbing the singing of the seventy-second psalm. The deacons emerged from the sanctuary and captured the sacrilegious disturber of the congregation; and on Monday morning they prosecuted him before a magistrate for violating the Lord's day. The point at issue was whether the prisoner was travelling "from necessity," and the highest tribunal of the Commonwealth finally adjudged that if he merely rode post-baste on the public business, without blowing his horn, the deacons were in the wrong; but if he blew his horn while he was riding he was a disturber of the peace as well as a miserable sinner. But not to explore so remotely, there have,

in our own day and generation, in the same exemplary Commonwealth of Massachusetts in which the descons pounced upon the postrider, been adjudications by the court of last resort, which are equally droll. In the year of grace, 1864, two honest old codgers were tilling an unproductive farm in the seaside town of Scituate, where seaweed has from time immemorial been used for manure by the country-fols. James and Gamaliel Sampson were the homely names of these husbandmen. They were pious and prudent. In their prudence they had purchased a license, for which they made an annual payment, from the owner of a beach near Scituate harbor, distant about four miles from their farm. In their piety they attended "meeting" three times every Sunday, besides teaching in the Sunday-school. On Saturday, November 25, 1864, there was a storm which threw upon the beach a large quantity of seaweed. On Sunday November 26th, James and Gamaliel, when they left the meetinghouse, about balf-past 8 o'clock in the evening, perceived that the tide was coming in, and that there was a fresh breeze blowing in such a direction as on former occasions had caused seaweed to float away from the beach when the tide rose, and be wholly lost. After grave consultation upon this state of affairs they precured a pitchtork, an ox-cart, and a yoke of oxen, and proceeded therewith to the beach, where they arrived at 10 o'clock. There was no house near, and the highway was at a co siderable distance. But even i the neignoorhood had been populous, all the rest of the good people of Scituate, according to the usage of half a dozen generations, were abed and asleep by halfpast 9. Arrived at the shore, James pitched the seaweed into the cart, and Gamaliel goaded the oxen into drawing it to the top of the beach, where they tipped out the load above the possible reach of the tide. and then they went home and to bed, and rested from their labors. But their works followed them. Early the next morning the town of Scituate was apprised of this breach of law and morals by other less prudent farmers whose serweed had been floated far away. A public prosecution was forthwith instituted against James and Gamaliel for a violation of the Lord's day, and these two flagrant criminals, upon proof of the foregoing facts, were tried and convicted. Like the hasty post-rider, they were not content with the decision of any tribunal short of the final court of appeal, which in the year of grace 1867 rendered its decision by the mouth of a witty judge, who soon afterward became Attorney-General of the United States, and whose own quick sense of humor must have occasionally contrasted the occupations of Sunday in Washington with those of Sunday in Scituate. The decision was "that taking the scaweed was not a work of necessity within the meaning of the law." But the judge added-perhaps as a suggestion to James and Gamaliel for future contingencies: "How it would be if a whale happened to get stranded on the shore we need not determine." The same court, in the same year of grace drew a fine distinction between the animal kingdom and the vegetable kingdom under the Sunday law. Works "of charity" as well as "of necessity" are permissible by the statute. It has sometimes been attempted to gain the decision of the six learned judges of last resort in Massachusetts, whether the work of shaving, executed by a barber upon a customer upon the Lord's day, was indeed charitable when performed with a dull razor. But we believe that this important question remains undetermined. "To save life, or prevent or relieve suffering, and this la the case of animals as well as men," has, however, been pronounced to be charitable by the same learned judge whom we have quoted above. Yet the grave tri bunal of which he was a member, almost at the same time, solemnly adjudged that hoeing potatoes at 8 o'clock on a Sunday morning, which would otherwise have wilted and dled in the heat of noonday, was neither mecessary por charitable, and by consequence was unlawful, and subjected to punishment an unlucky shoemaker who was guilty of the act in the year of grace 1866.

The statute-book of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts punishes severely not only whoever practices any "game, sport, play, or public niversion, except a concert of sacred music," upon the evening of the Lord's day, but also "whoever is present, wittingly or unwittingly, at any such profune exercise;" and, not content with this, it applies the same pensities to "the evening next preceding the Lord's day," unless the diversion shall have been duly licensed by the public authorities. It has been suggested that, under these provisions, any reverend megistrate of the Commonwealth would become a culprit if a malicious neighbor should visit him on a Saturday evening and suddenly dance a jig in his parlor, or, unexpectedly producing ) state a pack of cards, should perform in his presence the demoralizing game called solitaire. This, however, may be doubted. Cap-tious critics have also vainly strives to reconcile the letter of the law with the lively performance of operatic music in the Boston churches at the religious services on Sunday. It is even whispered that strains from the "Grande Duchesse" have been heard on such occasions. But, passing all this, there is another provision in the same therefore becomes a matter of very serious consideration for good people what is and what is not divine worship in Massachusetts, and in the last volume of the judicial reports of the State, just published, we find an amazing definition of it. It seems that Madame Feital, a worthy dame, who lived in the city of Charlestowi, under the shadow of Bunker Hill monument, broke her leg, or was injured in some such way, in an accident which befel a horsecar of the Middlesex Railroad Company on the afternoon of Sunday, September 6, 1868, in which she was riding as a passenger. In a suit brought by her against the railroad corporation, to recover damages for her injury as caused by their negligence, they set up in defence that she was travelling on the Lord's day; to which she rejoined that the allegation was true, but that she was travelling lawfully to attend divine worship. And the parties butted and rebutted and sur-rebutted until the issue was refined to this: That Dame Feital could recover damages for her leg if the services which she was travelling to attend were services for divine worship; but otherwise, under the beneficent law of Massachusetts, the careless corporation would go scot-free. The case was tried on this narrow issue Madame Feital, it appeared, was a Spiritualist, and usually attended public religious services conducted by ministers of her own faith in her own reighborhood in Charlestown. But on this particular Sunday afternoon her meeting-house was closed, and looking around for some other place to worship, her eye fell upon the newspaper entitled the Banner of Light, and fixed itself on an advertisement of a camp-meeting to be held in Malden, at which "Miss Laura Ellis would give physical manifestations in a tent, to which an admittance fee of twenty-five cents would be charged." The railway of the Middlesex Railroad Company runs to Malden, and Madame Feital was duly conveyed to the camp-ground in the cars of that corporation, and then and there attended the ship, her eye fell upon the newspaper enticorporation, and then and there attended the services conducted by Miss Ellis, the nature of which was testified to be as follows: Miss Ellis was put into a box with her hands tied; music was heard coming from the box; and when it was opened Miss Ellis was found with her hands untied, and a ring that had been on her finger was then on the end of her nose?' It was on her way home from these services that Madame Feital broke her leg. The counsel for the railroad company argued that this was not divine worship, but was an "idolatrous show," and ship, but was an "idolatrous show," and was adapted not to the edification but to the disturbance of "serious people." The jury, however, found that it was divine worship her leg. The question of idolatry and jugglery were afterwards gravely and exhaustively argued before the six judges of the court of last resort by eminent counsel on both sides, and the court, after selemn consultation, refused to disturb the verdict. We think that the railroad corporation were righteously mule ed. Their plea of Sunday travelling, to avoid the just penalty dress or their negligence, was a mean one at the best; and we are not disposed to dispute the ruling of six so learned judges. We merely call the attention of such of our readers as reside in the good State of Massachusetts, or are interested in its affairs, to the act that if anybody had blown a post-horn, or gathered sea-weed, or hoed potatoes in such a way as to disturb Miss Laura Ellis while she was in the box, whether the ring was on her finger or her nose at the time the offender would not only have been liable to the ordinary penalties for the violation of the Lord's day by unnecessary and uncharitable labor, but also to "imprisonment in the jail not exceeding thirty days, or fine not exceeding fifty," for disturbing divine worship. Since the last Spring season several valuable springs have been discovered at this place. One of them, according to an analysis made by Professor Tonry, of Battimore, is decidedly impregnated with the "Satts of Lithia," which has given such celebrity to the Gettysburg spring in our own country and to the Aix is Champelle and Vichy waters of the continent of Europe, and which is so highly esteemed in the medical world as a remedy in zout, rheamatism, and in kidney and blastder affections.

zout, rhenmatism, and in kidney and bladder affections.

Professor George B. Wood of the University of Pennsylvania, says: "There is perhaps no other remeoy from which equal efficacy may be expected in the removal of the deposits of the urate of soda in the joints and ligamentous tissues in gouty patents, and in preventing the deposits in the kidneys and urinary passages."

It may be worthy of note that this is the only Spring in Virginia in which this salt is found otherwise than the merest trace.
